LeRoy Township

LeRoy Township was named for LeRoy, New York, the town from which many of its settlers had emigrated.

Agriculture has been a major industry in the township since it was founded. In the 1830s and 1840s, with the development of the Erie Canal system and better roads, crops became a major export along with cheese made from excess milk. As of 2010, there are approximately 3,253 residents living within the 25 square miles of LeRoy Township.
